M: Hello, everyone. Last class we learned about the dangers of climate change. Today, I'll tell you about some foods that might disappear because of climate change. First of all, 70 percent of the world's coffee could disappear by 2080 due to climate change. In Africa, the amount of coffee produced has dropped by more than 50 percent. Secondly, avocados are also in danger. It usually takes 72 gallons of water to make just one pound of avocados. Climate change in California has resulted in a lack of water, so the avocado plants aren't producing enough fruit. Thirdly, warmer temperatures affect apple trees, too. To grow properly, apple trees need a certain period of cold weather. Lack of cold weather time leads to lower apple production. Finally, the unstable climatic conditions through crop season are causing a decrease in strawberry production in Florida. Specifically, hotter-than-normal weather has delayed the flowering and production of strawberries. Now, let me show you some slides about this issue.
